MODERN RUINS IN EGYPT.

Thrilling Incidents of the Bombardment Taken from English Papers.

The English papers contain many interesting details of the bombardment of Alexandria and scenes afterward. The following is from the London Times under date of Alexandria, July 15:

We had to make our way through heaps of rubbish, from which the marines picked up the most miscellaneous assortment of odds and ends, consisting of buttons, stays, playing-cards, files, and boxes of matches. At several points we had to go in single file, at others wait to allow a wall to fall, at others to leave the street and adopt a more passable sideway. No one was to be seen. It was a march over the ruins of what had been a city. At last we reached what had been the square. What was it too well-known to need description; what it is quite beyond all my powers. There in the centre, lighted up by a lurid mass of smoke, stood the large equestrian statue of Mehemet Ali; behind it I could see the Palais de Justice. On either side of me was one long line of fire. At every moment a house fell that made a sound which recalled the cannonade of last Tuesday. As I walked on, I tried, but failed to distinguish one house from another. In a place which I have seen almost daily for seventeen years I could not even find out the openings of the familiar streets leading to the markets. I could only guess where certain familiar houses had been from the proximity to the statue, which stood alone in the centre.

At last we distinguished two moving figures. We went to them, and acted as interpreter, while they told us a history which reminded me of Dante's Inferno. The perfect calmness, the utter absence of excitement with which they told the tale of horrors, the business-like accuracy with which they showed us where we were to go to find persons in distress and the quiet manner in which, after giving us all the information we required, they left to return to their work of danger and charity, as quietly as if there were nothing extraordinary in their position, was proof of a sort of heroism which won the admiration of all and compels me to give their names. They were Pere Guillaume, a Belgian Franciscan, and Frere Miville, a French Lazarist.

REFUGEES IN THE COPTIC CHURCH.

As we approached the street leading to the Coptic church a crowd came toward us carrying the flag of truce. They were chiefly Copts, but some were Arabs, who came to say that they had thirteen hundred refugees in the Coptic church; also one prisoner, a Berber, whom they had arrested while he was assisting to burn down a house. This man was brought out, accompanied by his master, a respectable Italian named Testa, who stated that his servant had forced him to leave his house, and had set fire to it. The man was handed over to the guard, and, after ample evidence had been adduced in support of the statements against him, he was shot. In one of the large houses near the station some persons appeared at one of the windows and asked us if all was over. They were alone in the building.

I went up to the Arab hospital with Dr. Bell, of the Helicon, and a party of blue jackets, to take measures for relieving the wounded, who were without medical attendance, or even the bare necessities of life. There were thirty-two wounded, including six women, some in a frightful condition. Most of the poor wretches were suffering from gunshot wounds or shell splinters. There were evident signs of many wounded men having made their escape when the troops and Arabi left the town. Blankets from the beds had apparently been hastily thrown aside, and every bed seemed as if it had been quitted hurriedly. The patients who were not able to move only remained. We had taken up a quantity of biscuit, cocoa and sugar to feed the wounded. We found one man there who was looking after the wants of the patients. He is or was a stevedore, employed in the service of a large steamship company trading to Alexandria.

The Hotel Abbat is safe. It was defended by a few Frenchmen, and it is a notable fact that where any one was able to keep up a sharp fire on the incendiaries, they retreated and chose less dangerous prey. The house of Dr. Mackie, the consular surgeon, is completely gutted. Next to that again is a large well-known shop, known as Camoine's. This is burnt to the ground, and I saw near it a starving dog trying to eat some kid gloves.

ESCAPE OF A GERMAN PROFESSOR.
Prof. Schwomfurth was staying with a friend named Friedheim in Sherif Pasha street. Finding that the house had been fired they let themselves down from the second story and were fired at, but happily missed. Going through back streets they met some guards of Zulcar Pasha, the recently appointed Governor, who took them to the hospital. But here the mob broke into the hospital, declaring that the German flag displayed was flying as a signal to the ships. They insisted that the flag should be hauled down. This was done, and before they could make any other demand, two shots were fired into the crowd, upon which they fled.

THE KHEDIVE'S PLACE.

A dispatch to the London Standard says: The palace presents a strange appearance. The British sailors are quartered in magnificent apartments, where their laughter and jests sound strangely in the scenes of Oriental splendor. In the court-yards are everywhere the debris of the bombardment. Against the very steps of the palace lies one of the large projectiles thrown by the guns of the inflexible, titled up on end. Everywhere the glass is shattered, and Nordenflet bullets are sticking thickly in the walls. Downcast-looking Egyptian officers pass to and fro, and the selky cavalry troopers can hardly conceal their disgust at being compelled infrequently to give up their horses for the use of our officers, who ride here and there with messages.

Through the shattered casements and rents in the walls the ladies of the harem peep furtively at the British officers who are walking about waiting for orders. Outside the scene of devastation—the ruined forts and crumbling masonry—deaths description, while beyond, on the quiet waters of the harbor, the British iron-clads lie peacefully, every sign of the late engagement being already removed.

GENERAL ASPECT OF THE CITY.

The London Daily News has the following from the ruined city: I have just concluded a thorough examination of the present aspect of the town and can only convey a faint impression of the daily increasing destruction. In my opinion at least one-half of the European portion of the town is destroyed, not counting the cotton and wheat warehouses or the extreme suburbs. Strange to say, not one bank has been burnt or seriously pillaged, and the managers had taken excellent precautions. The courts, the club, the Bourse, and the Eastern Telegraph building are saved, although they were so surrounded by the fire that they were at first reported burnt. They probably owed much to the vigilance of old servants.

I visited all the hospitals, and cannot speak too highly of the devotion of the staff of the Christian Charity Sisters. In addition to their own sick they are crowded with refugees of all conditions. Some died after admission into the hospital, and the Sisters had no means of burying them. Others went mad from fright, and there were no appliances or rooms for their restraint. At the French or general hospital a cold shell from one of the ships outside the squadron penetrated the room where there were three of the Sisters and imbedded itself in the main wall. The poor women were afraid it would explode, but the marines, with an officer, called and assured them this was impossible.

FLOGGING AND SHOOTING.

I have just left the arsenal where, in the presence of Lord Charles Beresford, Commander Morrison, and Lieut. Bradford, the lash was inflicted by English sailors on eight or ten Arabs. Some received a dozen and others four dozen lashes. At 3 o'clock five men were publicly shot in the centre of the Place Mehemet Ali—four for murder and one as a spy. No Arab soldiers are allowed to go about with arms on any pretext, unless provided with an order.

How the question of food is to be met promptly, it is difficult to see. Hundreds are homeless. The Syrian Jews, Copts and Christians are literally starving. Respectable men whom I have known by sight for years, implored me with tears in their eyes to give them bread for their wives and families outside the town, who are utterly destitute. In some instances, without thinking I offered them money. They shook their heads and said: "Money won't buy bread where none can be found." I then sent them to the arsenal, where they could obtain ship's biscuit, but starving people cannot live permanently on a dole of biscuit.

Just at this moment the English sailors are digging a grave in the square, ready for twelve ruffians, who will be shot presently. I saw one myself in a shop stealing silver, and after a little fight he was captured and handed over to the Americans, who gave him to the English. Lord Charles Beresford tried him yesterday. The silver jug which he had inside his shirt were produced, and he was sentenced to death.

I saw upwards of fifty corpses in the streets, evidently of those shot while looting.

STEALING HER HAIR.

A Belle Robbed of Her Tresses Dies of Grief.

HAGERSTOWN, Md., July 29.—The death of Miss Jennie Boggs, a prepossessing young lady of 16 years of age, occurred here on Thursday under singular distressing circumstances, and physicians who were in attendance state that the young lady's demise was occasioned solely by grief.

Miss Boggs was a member of the family of Mrs. George Freaner, and was highly respected by all who enjoyed the pleasure of her acquaintance in this little city. She was a beautiful brunette, and her long raven locks, when permitted to float over her shoulders, fell to her feet. Miss Boggs was regarded as the belle of her circle, and many ladies were envious of her fresh young beauty and handsome locks. About two weeks ago Miss Boggs was aroused from sleep at midnight by a noise of some walking in her room. She arose in her bed, and she did so she observed a man about to leave the room. The inmates of the house were aroused, but no trace of the intruder could be found. It was the general opinion of those informed of the nocturnal visitor that he was some one who desired to cut off her hair or a friend of some jealous rival. On last Thursday night week Miss Boggs came in from a horse back ride, and was in the best of spirits. She chatted with Miss Freaner until quite late, and then repaired to her room for the night. The bed chambers occupied by Miss Boggs was on the second floor overlooking the rear yard. The columns of an old-fashioned portico reared their heads to a level with the window and supported a small roof. The night being exceedingly warm the young lady sat on the little roof in the moonlight and loosened her magnificent hair. Mrs. Freaner cried out good naturedly to her that she would catch her death of cold. The girl laughing replied that she was bathing in the moonlight and dew, and could not possibly forsake so pleasant a task for the sleep-god. At midnight, however, she went in and was heard to close and secure the shutters to her window. When the servants arose next morning they found the side door ajar. They conjectured that some members of the family had arisen before them, and said nothing concerning their discovery. Breakfast was served and Miss Boggs did not come down. She usually arose late, and was not disturbed. About 7 o'clock screams issued from the young lady's room. Several members of the family hastened up stairs and found Miss Jennie in a swoon. Her appearance was so changed that they scarcely could recognize her. Her beautiful hair had been cut entirely away and removed. Restoratives were applied and Miss Boggs was revived. Between her sobs she stated that she had slept soundly during the night, and awoke in the morning to find that her locks had been shorn. She was a sound sleeper and the deed was committed while she slumbered so dexterously as not to arouse her. An investigation of the premises revealed the fact that the side door had been entered by the agency of a skeleton key, which had also served to unlock the door opening into the young lady's bed chamber. The person who committed the heartless crime did not retire by the door, but was evidently so afraid of detection that he escaped by the bedchamber window and the portico columns. Imprints of the booted feet were found at the base of the columns, and the vines which were entwined about the pillars were slightly disarranged. Miss Boggs wept throughout Friday and late into the night. Saturday morning she appeared calmer, but during the day she again gave way to her grief. She declined to see friends, and shut herself up in a room. Wednesday she was in such a nervous condition that medical aid was summoned, but remedies were useless, however, and the young lady grew rapidly worse and died on Thursday last evening, and the funeral train was one of the largest ever witnessed in Hagerstown. There is positively no clue as to the identity of the murderer of poor Miss Boggs.

WHAT FEAR DOES.

The Hair Turning Gray in a Half-Hour From Fright.

Staff-Surgeon Perry, while serving in India during the mutiny, saw a strange sight. Among the prisoners taken in a skirmish at Chanda was a sepoy of the Bengal army. He was brought before the authorities and put to the question. Fully alive to this position the Bengalee stood almost stupefied with fear, trembling greatly with horror and despair plainly depicted on his face. The bystanders were startled by the sergeant in charge of the prisoner exclaiming, "He is turning gray!" All eyes were turned on the unfortunate man watching with wondering interest the change coming upon his splendid, glossy, jet-black locks. In half an hour they were of a uniform grayish hue.

Some years ago a young lady who was anxiously awaiting the coming of her husband elect, received a letter conveying the sad tidings of his shipwreck and death. She instantly fell to the ground insensible, and so remained for five hours. On the following morning, her hair, which had been previously of a rich brown color, had become as white as a cambric handkerchief, her eyebrows and eyelashes retaining their natural color. After a while the whitened hair fell off, and was succeeded by a new growth of gray. This case, coming under the observation of Dr. Erasmus Wilson, shattered his unbelief in the possibility of the sudden conversion of the hair from a dark color to snow white. No man knows more about the hair than Dr. Wilson, but he is at a loss to explain the phenomenon quite to his own satisfaction. "If," says he, "it be established that the hair is susceptible of permeation by fluids derived from the blood vessels of the skin into the substance of the hair really occurs the quantity and nature being modified by the peculiarity of the constitution or the state of health of the individual—it follows that such fluids, being altered in their chemical qualities, may possess the power of impressing new conditions on the structure into which they enter. Thus, if they contain an excess of salts, of lime, they may deposit salts of lime in the tissue of the hair, and so produce a change in its appearance from dark to gray." Then he tells us: "The phenomenon may be the consequence of chemical alteration wrought in the very blood itself, or it may be a conversion for which the tissue of the hair is chiefly responsible." So many "may-bes" from such an authority prove that the mystery of the sudden whitening of the hair is yet unsolved. It is likely to remain unsolved, since the doctor—more modest than many of his brethren—owns that "the mysteries of vital chemistry are unknown to man."—From the Social Science Monthly.

An Amusing Experience of an American Journalist in Mexico.

"I had rather an amusing love affair myself in Texas, which I should like to tell you if you will not feel bored with my long anecdotes," said the New York man, throwing away his stump of a cigar, "I was staying at a rancho on the Rio Grande and fell in love, or thought I had fallen in love, with a beautiful little damsel who resided with her father—a small hacienda twenty miles away. I was the possessor of a new pair of buckskin breeches which I had purchased in New Orleans, but had hitherto never worn. One morning I put them on. They fitted perfectly and I was so delighted with the appearance of my nether limbs that I determined to pay a visit to Donna Isabella. When half way on my ride it began to rain in torrents, and my breeches began to stretch, and the stretching continued until they hung half a dozen inches below my boot heels. I arrived in the young lady's presence in rather a worse looking condition than that of the drowned rat. However, she received me kindly and conducted me to the kitchen, where a roaring fire was blazing. I sat talking to her while my clothes were drying, and was too much occupied to think about my breeches, when my love making was cut short by the announcement of supper. I gave my arm to the Donna and entered the next room. We were greeted with shouts of laughter from a large company of men and women who were seated at the table.

I glanced downward and my eyes fell on the cause of their mirth. My breeches had shrunk with the steam until they had rolled above my knees, leaving a wide space of bare flesh between them and my socks. A love for the esthetic did not flourish in those days, at least not in Mexico, and I was glad to hide my legs under the table, and for the rest of the evening I wrapped a mantilla round my limbs. I was too uncomfortable to resume my love-making to Isabella; besides she laughed whenever she looked at me. I slept there that night in a room on the ground floor overlooking a wide meadow. Thinking the fresh air would restore my breeches to their normal condition I took them off and spread them on the grass, and then jumped back through the window and went to bed. In the morning I arose early and looked for the cherished garments. A dreadful sight met my gaze. Two cows were contentedly breakfasting off them and only a portion of the seat and the band with the initials remained. I did not know what to do, and lay in bed waiting for the appearance of one of the inhabitants of the house. Presently Isabella's father went past my window. I hailed him and told him my plight. He laughed and said he would fetch me a pair of his trousers. Now I am tall and spare; my Mexican host was short and enormously fat; the trousers he produced me were patched in every direction with cloth of divers colors. Imagine my appearance when I put them on. The rest of the house had been told of my misfortune, so when I left the room I found all the men and girls in the place, including Isabella, awaiting my debut. I shall never forget the wild yells of laughter which greeted me, and it struck me that Isabella laughed louder than the rest. I made a rush for the stable, hastily saddled my horse, and, without a word of farewell, rode off as hard as I could. I never went to see Isabella again. Nothing kills love so badly as ridicule."—From the Philadelphia Press.

Slaughtered by a Runaway Train. PITTSBURG, PA., August 4.—A train of seventeen cars heavily laden with coal became unmanageable while descending a steep grade on the Cranberry road this afternoon and ran away. The wreck was strewn along the track for two miles, and at the end of that distance the train plunged into some cars standing on the track and created great havoc.

Sadly Afflicted. "My boy was badly afflicted with rheumatism," said Mr. Barton, of the great store firm of Redway & Barton, of this city, to one of our reporters. "We doctored him a great deal, but could not find no cure; I had heard so much of the efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil that I finally determined to try it. Two bottles of the Oil fully cured him.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Bridgewater Mills at Fredericksburg, Va., will start on Monday on the modern gradual reduction of manufacturing flour by a complete roller plan of breaks, being the first mill in Virginia to start-up in full on this system.

Mark I. The Readjuster party will surely come to grief, if anywhere in Virginia it be saddled with a nominee who is not a Readjuster, tried and true.—Whig.

We cordially endorse the above sentiment and declaration of the Whig. An original, consistent Readjuster is always to be preferred; a man known in his own people, to have been and to be a strong adherent to the principles of the party, to its men and measures, is always the man to trust in places of trust and responsibility. No man who waits and watches for the stream of success to flow smoothly and wait him on to office and place ought ever to be confided in, until he shall prove himself by his works and his boldness and courage to speak his sentiments and opinions to his neighbors. The Readjuster party had arisen from comparatively a few bold and independent spirits in Virginia, often found in the county and country town and villages, who saw plainly the great abuses and maladministration of the State Government in all its branches. They saw Bourbonism—hostility to change and reform—fastened on the offices of the State, from Governor to the most inferior office in the Government; but above all, and more than all, they saw and felt the "burdens" truly designated by Governor Kemper in all his messages to the Legislature taxing them down and grinding them into the very dust and dirt of poverty and shame. Superadded to all this they saw with prophetic vision a crude and wicked system of Funderism, increasing the public debt of the State visibly year after year, until it had reached enormous and gigantic proportions. The sinking fund, provided always by all prudent and wise governments, had utterly and wholly failed to diminish it. All these evils, and many more were seen and protested against by a few firm and stern Readjusters. They demanded a change. Their numbers increased; and they are still working and fighting for supremacy. They will do so, and the fruits of their triumph be seen and felt all over the State. But to effect this we must put men in place and power who are genuine, tried and true Readjusters. Men of high character and talents; men who come up to the standard—is he capable, is he honest, is he faithful to the Readjuster principles as laid down in the Readjuster platform? Remember Washington's order in the Revolution: "Put none but Americans on guard to-night."—Culpeper Times.

The local editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, Mr. J. H. Mabbitt, says: "We have used St. Jacobs Oil in our family for rheumatism, and found it to be a first-class thing."—Boston Herald.

What means this great whoop and cry over the President's veto of the River and Harbor bill, as if his objections to the bill originated in some special spite against ourselves? If you mean that for me, sir (they seem to say), you are an accidental scoundrel, sir—you are a Gaieteau President, sir? Pass it over head and hurrath!

So far as this city and all our cities and navigable streams in this State are concerned, we rejoice to witness a returning sense of fostering care and consideration for them on the part of the Federal Government. To secure these appropriations and others hereafter, within constitutional limits, is one of the avowed objects of the Readjuster party. But where, we would like to ask, is the consistency of these gentlemen who lose no opportunity to abuse the Administration for the exercise of a constitutional power, when they were loud in their laudation of Andy Johnson a few years ago for doing pretty much the same thing? Did they ever call him an accident of Booth's pistol? The truth is, these editors are but the representatives of a small-potato class of politicians who make it a point to be dissatisfied with everything which is not done by their set. If Arthur had ignifed his approval of the bill, these grumblers would have pointed with a snicker wink to an enormous cat in the political meat-tub. Oh, yes! He and Hubbe want to carry Virginia next fall for his Administration! But the President, under a proper sense of his constitutional responsibility, sends the bill back without his approval, because he sees grave objections to many of its features, and at once Tray, Blanche and Sweetheart bark at him. Would you, as a doctor, suffer your patient to swallow a dose, however proper in itself, into which the compounder had infused a doubtful or deleterious drug, as if you knew it?

How long has it been since those now calling themselves Democrats, and Conservative Democrats, and Democratic Conservatives, and all that sort of thing—how long, pray you, since they proclaimed eternal opposition to all internal improvements by the general Government? They do not know really what they want beyond their insane hankering after place and power for their own sake and not for the sake of the people. The people will not tolerate such trifling with their interests any longer. The class of political fogies who can no longer control the destinies of this growing State of ours may raise all the clamors, and call all the spiteful names, and make all the disfiguring contumacities they please, but they cannot mislead the people any longer. They have had enough of their pretences and performances—the constitutional Democrats of the Jeffersonian stamp! Heavens save the mark!—Whig.

No Whiskey! BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is one of the very few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whiskey, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whiskey and other intoxicating beverages.

Rev. G. W. Rice, editor of the American Christian Review, says of Brown's Iron Bitters: "Gentle, O., Nov. 16, 1881. Gents:—The foolish wasting of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to saloons for temporary recuperation."

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.

FARM and HOUSEHOLD.

Facts for Farmers.

Profit can be realized sooner and oftener from poultry than any other kind of animal. Statistics show that vastly more people live in their own houses in the country than in the city. Do not attempt to farm with a pair of old plows. Farming can only be thoroughly done with good teams. Every farmer should read all he can, and get all the information that he can from successful farmers around him.

There is probably no disease of cultivated plants that has caused so much suffering to the human family as the "wet rot" in potatoes.

It is observed that the most successful grape growing countries have the least of rainfall, especially during the summer season.

Buckwheat generally sells for as much in the market as any kind of grain, and it is wonderful that more attention is not given to its cultivation.

Not Very Much.

A young man with a nose like a razor and an eye which would have raised a blister on sheet-iron on a hot day halted a pedestrian on Gratiot avenue and stated that he was trying to raise money to reach the bedside of his dying aunt in Chicago. He was too proud to beg, but if the citizen would give him a quarter he would show him a trick worth five dollars.

'Vhas ish dot driek?' queried the citizen.

'It is to make ten cents go further than a dollar. You can play it on the boys and make ten dollars a day.'

'My friend, I never blays mit de boys.'

'Yes, but you can have lots of fun, you know?'

'I vhas no handt for fun. If I efer git off some shokes I nefer laff.'

'Yes, but this is something new.—When you come down to the grocery on an evening you—'

'I doan' come down. I vhas home on der sheeps all der eafnings.'

'But you could have a little fun man, I likes to schmoke and read der morning papers.'

'Well, I don't want to beg, and I am offering you this trick very low in order to get home and see my sister die. Have you a dying sister?'

'I doan' expect I have. Vhas ish dot driek?'

'To make ten cents go father than a dollar.'

'Und vhill she do it?'

'She will.'

'Und five cents goes more ash half a dollar?'

'Just so.'

'Und a cent goes petter ash a dime?'

'That's the ratio.'

'Und nothing at all goes petter ash five cents?'

'I—I—I think it does.'

'Vhell, you shust consider you haf all derr nottings efer was und you vhill be in Chicago to-morrow! Gif my love to that dying sister' and tell her dot you saw me well. You'd petter git some express wagon to draw dose nickles down to der railroad, und you look leedle outt for some Dutchmans who has been eating grass und vhas green?—Free Press.

A youthful bride and groom arrived at New Albany, Ind. Two rascals got into the couple's room, introduced themselves as police officers, and pretended to arrest the husband for marrying a girl under 18. He gave them $10 and they departed.

A man had to make it up ever so amicably after you have gone into one.

A Texas man of sixty-two lately took a second wife, is now cutting six new front teeth. He's grandpa and baby combined.

Smith discovered, after marriage, that his wife wrote poetry; but he couldn't do anything about it then.—He had taken her for better or for verse.

Every one in this world has his or her share of troubles and trials. Let us then try as much as we are able not to increase the burden of any by as much as the weight of a straw.

An Austin father complained bitterly of the way his children destroyed their clothing. He said:

When I was a boy I only had one suit of clothes, and I had to take care of it. I was only allowed one pair of shoes a year in those days.

There was a pause, and then the oldest boy spoke up as said:

'I say, dad, you have a much easier time of it now—you are living with us.'
