THE PATRIOT AND HERALD.
SARAH BERNHARDT.
Lecture on Great Tragedienne by M. Victor Rigneur.
M. Victor Rigneur, a well-known professor of the French language, delivered an interesting lecture last evening at Lehman's Hall on "Sarah Bernhardt." The object and the reputation of the lecturer attracted a highly intelligent audience. M. Rigneur spoke entirely in the French language. He commenced with a brief sketch of the foundation of the Comedie Francaise by Richelieu, its organization and success, having celebrated its two hundred and fiftieth anniversary last month. In regard to Mlle. Bernhardt, he stated that the private life of artists did not belong to the public and she should only be regarded as an artiste and welcomed everywhere as such. She was borne in Paris her mother was of Dutch and Jewish descent. She was baptized and educated in a convent at Versailles. Upon entering the conservatory she obtained the first prize for declamation and on account of this honor and privilege she entered the Theater Francaise. Her career there was brief but distinguished, and was followed by a brilliant engagement at the Theater de L'Odeon, where she was first noticed for extraordinary diction. In the popular comedy of "The Passant," by M. Francois Coppee, she created the character of Zanetta, which was really the first triumph of her artistic career. Her eccentricities of disposition were always the theme of her companion artists and the public. In "Ruy Blass" Mlle Bernhardt achieved her next triumph, and she then left the Odeon and contracted an engagement with the Comedie Francaise, which she canceled some seven months ago in order to play in England and America. Her great success in "Hernani" completed her reputation as the most extraordinary artist of the day. Mr. Rigneur concluded by briefly reviewing Mlle. Bernhardt's successes in New York and Boston, and expressing the hope that the people of Baltimore would accord her as hearty and flattering a reception as she received elsewhere and which became her distinguished talent.—Baltimore Gazette.

RELIABILITY.
If you are fortunate enough to know a truly reliable man, make him your friend at once, if you can. You can only do so, however, by assimilating his character. The reliable man is a man good of judgment. He does not jump at conclusions. He is thoughtful. He turns a subject over in his mind and looks at it all around. He is not a partial or one-sided man. He sees through a thing. He is apt to be a very reticent man. He is a moderate man, not only in habits of body, but also of mind. He is not a passionate man; if so by nature he has overcome it by grace. He is a sincere man not a plotter or schemer. What he says may be relied on. He is a trustworthy man. You feel safe with your property or the administration of affairs in his hands. He is brave man, for his conclusions are logically deduced from the sure basis of truth, and he does good man, for no one can be thoroughly honest and truthful without being good. Is such a quality attainable? Most assuredly so. It is born—it is made. Character may be formed; of course, then its component parts may be moulded to the formation. To gain a spotless reputation is a prize worth trying for.

TO WASH FLANNELS.
First have soft water for the whole process, made so artificially if necessary, and next have good soap. Our best soaps are safe for this purpose. You may wash and rinse entirely in cold water if you choose, but if you wash in warm water you must not rinse in cold. It is decidedly best to use only warm water all through, the rinsing water warmer than the suds, if there is any difference. It is best to make a good, strong, clean suds (and not wash nice white flannels in a dirty suds with other clothes that are to be boiled), and put the flannels in it, instead of rubbing soap into the cloth. Hand rubbing tends to full and shrink flannel, as it mats and interlaces the delicate fibres.—American Agriculturist.

OVER-CONFIDENCE.
Don't be over-confident, young man. Don't carry your pet hobby too far. Take note of the shoulders and legs of the man before you sass him. Out here on West Hill there is a goat that for three long years has butted everything and everybody the broad empire of Burlington could send against him. He ate the circus bills before the paste was dry, and when the advance agent remonstrated with him, the goat just stood up and crowded him through the bill stand. He once upset a hay wagon; jammed his head through a wood shed; and fattened an officer up against a brick house. And one day he wandered down into a saw-mill and butted the fly-wheel. Only once. When he came back his neck was bent. He couldn't make a dent in a sack of meal now.—Young man be content with reasonable victories. Some day, you too, may run against a fly-wheel.—Hawkeye.

ENTERTAINING COMPANY
The whole philosophy of hospitality is summed up by Emerson in the following: "I pray you. O excellent wife, not to cumber yourself and me to get a rich dinner for this man or this woman, who has alighted at our gate nor a bedchamber made ready at too great a cost. These things, if they are curious in, they can get for a dollar at the village. But let this stranger see, if he will, in your looks, in your accent and behavior your heart and earnestness, your thought and will, what he cannot buy at any price, at any village or city, and which he may well travel fifty miles and dine sparingly and sleep hard, in order to behold. Certainly let the board be spread and the bed be dressed for the traveler but let not the emphasis of hospitality be in these things. Honor to the house when they are simple to the verge of hardship, so that the intellect is awake and sees the laws of the universe, the soul worships truth and love, honor and courtesy flows into all deeds." One of the greatest comforts of having a home should be that in it we have a place for friend and even stranger—rooms, more than supply the needs of the family and extra "leaves" to the extension table. The secret of true hospitality as Emerson has stated, is in its coming from the heart.

CHEAP AND GOOD CISTERN.
An abundance of rain water for family use, for the barn-yard, and for irrigation in the garden, is still a great desideratum in our rural districts. The great bar to the water supply is the anticipated expense. It costs money to excavate and line the sides of a cistern with stone or brick. Most farm houses have no provision for washing except well-water, drawn with the bucket, and this is often hard, and the yard and barn-cellar are without any form water for stock. A cistern that will hold all the water that falls from the house, or the barn, is within the reach of every thrifty farmer, and will pay for itself every year in saving labor, and in the health and comfort of the family, and in the care of the farm stock. A neighbor of ours, who is a gardener as well as a farmer, built a cistern for his own greenhouse last year, and liked it so well that he has built another this fall for his barn and garden.

A LIBERAL EDITOR!
We were grieved to read the other day of the death of one of Michigan's jolliest pioneer editors—almost the last man of a band who published weeklies in the State when a cow skin would pay for a column "adv," and three bushels of corn dumped on the office floor stood for a year's subscription. Never a publisher was more liberal with his charge. It was hard work for him to charge for anything except the tax-list and mortgage sales, and he measured short even on them. One day in the years gone by, his paper copied an attack on a county official, and Old Mark was dozing at his desk when the injured party stalked in and began: "You are coward, sir—a coward." "Maybe I am," was the old editor's complacent reply. "And I can lick you, sir—lick you out of your wrinkled old boots." "I guess you could," answered Old Mark, as he busted the wrapper of only exchange. "I'm going to write an article calling you a fool, liar, coward, cur, slanderer, and a body-snatcher, and go over to Ionia and pay five cents a line to have it published." "Hey!" queried the old man as he wheeled around. "Yes, I'll pay five cents a line to have it published." "Say, let me tell you something," replied Mark, "I have got 200 more circulation than the Banner, and I'll publish your attack on me for two cents a line and take it out in mill-feed and corn stalks. Don't trot over to Ionia when you can help to build up your own town." Mark would have published it all, word for word, just as he said, and thrown in the cut of a horse or a stump puller free gratis, but the official cooled off.—Free Press.

Men can act bravely even from motives of vanity. He only in the vale of obscurity can brave adversity, who without friends to encourage, acquaintances to pity, or even without hope to alleviate his trade, can behave with tranquility, is truly great.

Don't blame the old rooster for bragging over every egg that is laid in the family. Only human nature, nothing more. You remember when that bouncing boy arrived at your house it wasn't the mother that went about doing the crowing.

It is about as hard to find a girl whose marriage is announced in the newspaper who isn't "beautiful and accomplished," as it is to find a man who has just died who wasn't "honored and respected by all who knew him."

Men appear more apt to err by having too high, than by having too despicable opinion of their natures; and by attempting to exalt their original place in creation, depress real value in society.

When Spotted Tail writes a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, enclosing a check for $332 to be used for certain legal expenses, who shall say the red man cannot be civilized?—Boston Herald.

TEMPERANCE!

From other lands, and sections of our own country, we are constantly hearing of the dreadful effects produced by intemperance, or the too free use of strong drink.

In the past five or six years intemperance has been increasing greatly in our own community, while all the time Marion has enjoyed the false reputation of being a temperance or moral town.

These questions are hard to answer. It is a dangerous one for men to pass an opinion upon. When we see young and old men in our town gradually becoming slaves to strong drink, we are so startled and grieved that we feel like we ought to say something, if possible, to check this dreadful downward march.

We write now under the strong conviction that our people, our community, have been making a serious mistake in their efforts to make Marion a temperance town.

PANAMA, Dec. 16.—The long expected Chilean advance on Lima is at last an actuality. On November 19th, eighteen vessels, all war sailing vessels or armed transports except four, which were towed, appeared off Pisco.

The rolling stock of the Pisco railroad was burned, a severe loss to the English bondholders. The Peruvian loss in the fight is placed at 150 men and the Chilean at three that number.

The world is now beginning to realize that prohibition is not only inefficient, but that temperance pledges, made only to be broken, will always work a decided moral injury.

We are satisfied that what is good or what is inefficient for large communities is correspondingly the same for a community like ours.

be taught to know that they are indulging in a habit that will prove their social, financial, physical and moral ruin. Let them be treated as rational, moral beings, not as mere beasts who can only be restrained by law, or weaklings who have to be bolstered up by a pledge before they can keep in the bounds of duty or temperance.

The Christmas holidays will commence in a few days, and we fear that an unusual amount of drunkenness will be witnessed in our community. Those persons who are friendly to temperance should use their influence with those individuals who they know are disposed to be weak, approach them and try to keep them from indulgence during the holidays.

NEW PUBLICATION.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for January 1881, has been received from the publishers. It is a very interesting number. The first article "Shakespeare's London" is one of especial interest.

The correspondence between Senator Conkling and Senator Bayard may be thus condensed: Conkling to Bayard—I hear that you called me a thief. Did you do so?

Bayard to Conkling—I did not say you were a thief. What I did say was that you assisted in the wrongful abstraction of money.

Conkling to Bayard—I asked you if you called me a thief. Instead of a plain answer you introduce a new and irrelevant allegation. I demand to know if you called me a thief or not.

Bayard to Conkling—I have already told you what I said. My authority will be found in the Congressional reports. If there was any feat, it was done by me.

CHILIAN ADVANCE ON LIMA. Probable Destruction of Towns and Villages. PANAMA, Dec. 16.—The long expected Chilean advance on Lima is at last an actuality.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—A general order was issued to-day assigning Brigadier-General Howard, to the command of the Department of West Point and to duty as Superintendent of the Military Academy; Brigadier-General Argur, to the command of the Department of Texas, Colonel Henry J. Hunt, to the temporary command of the Department of the South.

feasible by a resolute soldiery and affording almost certainly numerous opportunities for administering checks to the invaders. The force lately landed has not yet begun to advance, though a battalion of Chilean cavalry was reported on the road 15 miles from Pisco.

The port of Ancon has now been open several weeks and many families are availing themselves of this opportunity of leaving Lima. Five thousand tons of freight are awaiting transportation. The Pacific Steam Navigation Company's steamers are making extra trips to Chimboto to carry away the extraordinary traffic there offering before the Chileans resume the blockade.

A Narrow Escape.

Sarah Bernhardt narrowly escaped a serious injury on Wednesday night in Boston while acting the part of Camille. During the last act, while she was lying on a lounge, a large mantlepiece, on which was placed the glasses and bottles supposed to contain medicines, began to totter.

Christian K. Ross, the father of Charley Ross, who is on a visit to Pittsburg, is quoted as saying: "The only tidings I have ever received of Charley since he was stolen was the demand for the ransom of $25,000. If I had paid that I'd have had him long ago."

From a lengthy review of the political situation in Tennessee, from a special Shelbyville correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, we extract the following: "The late circular sent out by the Bondholders' Committee, in which they intimate that higher terms than 60 and 6 will be demanded, was a most unfortunate document."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—A general order was issued to-day assigning Brigadier-General Howard, to the command of the Department of West Point and to duty as Superintendent of the Military Academy.

THE MOSS KNOLL.

And close beside this aged thorn There is a fresh and lovely sight, A beautiful heap, a hill of moss Just half a foot in height...

WINIFRED'S FLOTSAM.

It was not because he was a woman hater that Guy Averill, at the age of seven and twenty, was still a bachelor, and heart-whole. Until this summer he had never been rich enough to support a wife, it was almost more than he could do to take care of himself...

Having a good income and prospects of plenty of remunerative business, Guy Averill began to think seriously of matrimony, and rather eagerly accepted an invitation to accompany his chum, Cassius Barclay, to the little town of New Myrtle where said chum's fiancée lived...

Mrs. Averill had met them in the winter at Washington, and afterwards had spent six weeks at their house; and hence Guy's invitation. Though he had never seen one of the family, he knew them all by description.

Helen was not pretty, but was domestic, accomplished and charming. The next one, Winifred, was a great rider, swimmer, archer, skater—in fact, "awfully fast," and magnificently beautiful; so Guy felt a strong presentiment that while he would like Helen and tolerate Winifred for her sake, he would be very sure to fall captive to the charms of 19-year-old Marcia, the gentle, fair and lovable girl whose picture he had so much admired.

When he first saw Marcia he was a little disappointed; her picture flattered her, but he soon forgot that in contemplation of her graceful figure, her gentle voice, and her quiet, womanly ways. He loved to see womanly ways. He loved to see a woman all womanly; thought a needle, not a pen, should be her tool; believed that the fireside was woman's sphere, and so on, all of which conditions Marcia filled.

"Your sister rides beautifully!" exclaimed Guy, a few hours after his arrival at Mrs. Tremaine's. "Yes," answered Marcia, sweetly. "She ought to, for she spends hours upon her horse."

"Do you ride?" "Not much. I don't care for such—such violent exercise. In fact, I don't have much time for it. I have a good deal of sewing to do, and—"

Marcia hesitated and shook out her work ostentatiously. "I didn't know you had any little folks in the house," remarked Guy, his attention thus drawn to the small apron in her hand.

"Oh! we haven't. This is for some of our poor Sunday school children. When I am at a loss for employment I always know where to turn, in a manufacturing town like this, where there is so much suffering."

"Do your sisters aid you?" "Helen can't her tresseau keeps her busy now, and Winifred—well, I'd laugh to see her doing such work."

"As that?" asked Winifred, who had just entered. "Sewing or embroidering," replied Marcia, not quite truthfully; but Guy, not knowing the difference between embroidering and plain sewing, was none the wiser.

"What is absurdly known as 'fancy' work I utterly abominate! It seems to me a great waste of time to pass hours and hours in making hideous tides and mats or high art curtains out of ticking and such stuff."

"Don't you ever sew?" "Not if I can avoid it; certainly not for amusement."

"Not for the poor?" "The poor?" "Yes—as Miss Marcia does." "Oh! No, I don't work for the poor—as Marcia does," was Winifred's contemptuous reply. And Guy was disgusted. How was he to know that the little apron in Marcia's hands would never have been thought of if Guy Averill (whose mother had written of his love for womanly women) had not been there to see it?

But, though he was disgusted with the athletic young woman's sentiments, he was by no means so with herself. Her dark-blue riding habit showed her simple form to perfection, her soft, brown hair was ruffled by the wind, her cheeks bloomed with health and vigor, and she was a great contrast to her pale, home-keeping sister.

As the days passed Guy was compelled to change his first opinions of the sisters. Winifred's spirits, health and temper seemed to be perfect. Marcia, on the other hand, sometimes forgot her would-be gentleness, and showed a snappish petulance that amazed Guy.

"What a helpful, cheery woman she would be," meditated Guy, but not of Marcia. "No headaches, no sulks, no sharp speeches! But there—in a wife one needs domestic virtues as well as a good disposition; her ability to dance and ride, skate and swim, shoot and drive, will not keep my clothes in order—will not direct the household. Fancy this lovely young Amazon trying to cook a steak if there should be a rebellion in the kitchen!"

But though Guy thought he was fully determined to marry some one more like Marcia yet Winifred ruled his dreams by day and by night. At last he got to this pass:

"Will such a girl ever consent to settle down to domestic life? Will she not laugh at me if I dare to speak of love?"

One day Helen and Cassius went to a neighboring town on business, and Marcia, Winifred and Guy went rowing on the river, a narrow, deep and rapid stream. Just after the girls had landed, Marcia espied an empty basket floating down the stream, and declared that she wanted it, so Guy rowed out alone to get it. Suddenly, they never knew why, the boat capsized, and Guy in trying to regain it was carried yet further down the stream.

"Never mind the boat!" shouted Winifred. "Swim ashore; the current is very strong."

Which Guy at last concluded to do. When nearly on shore he was suddenly seized with cramps and could swim no further. Marcia shrieked and wrung her hands and cried—

"Oh, he'll drown—he'll drown!" "Hold your tongue! Run to Patterson's for help," cried Winifred, peremptorily, and at the same time sprang into the river herself.

In a few seconds she was beside the sinking man. Clutching him firmly by the arm with one of her strong hands she struck out slowly for the shore. Guy was tall and well proportioned, and it took all her strength to get him to land, but she did it, and none too soon, for her own strength was giving out.

"The heavens be praised!" cried Jim Patterson. "It is lucky for poor Mr. Averill that he wasn't alone with Miss Marcia! It's a strong arm and courageous heart you've got, Miss Winifred! Come Joe, lend a hand, and we'll carry him home. Faith, but he's heavy."

The doctor was sent for, and Guy's inopportune cramp proved to have been caused by a disordered system, and he was quite ill for several days. His mother was sent for, and he had the best of care, though he would rather have had Winifred with him more. It was always Marcia who fanned him and read to him, in his mother's absence, though Winifred always brought him his meals and somehow the heretofore admired sweetness began to pall. He sighed for a little breezy chat as on a warm summer afternoon one will sigh for an invigorating sea breeze.

"Mother," said he suddenly, the first day he was able to sit up, "which do you like the best, Winifred or Marcia?" "Just the question I had intended to ask you," was Mrs. Averill's diplomatic reply.

"Marcia is very gentle." "Very; and so quiet."

"Winifred is strong, mentally and physically." "She is an admirable girl."

Clearly he would get no decided opinion from his mother. He began again: "The fellow that gets either of them for a wife will be lucky."

"Very true. Is there any prospect that my boy will be so lucky?" "I wish there was"—with a sigh.

"But I fear not. She is so—so strong-minded."

"Thank fortune it is Winifred," thought Mrs. Averill. But she said: "Who, Marcia?" "Marcia! Oh, Mother," he laughed, "I never thought that you could be so sarcastic. No, I mean Winifred, of course. Dear, courageous girl! I owe my life to her bravery."

"Indeed you do." "What I fear is that so grand, so large hearted a girl—one so full of vigorous life—will never consent to settle down in the quiet way in which my wife may live for a little while, for two thousand dollars a year is not limitless. Fancy Winifred pottering ever domestic details, regulating servants and ordering, dinners. Fancy my queen in a dark, dirty kitchen!"

"Winifred Tremaine will never permit her kitchen to be dirty. Guy, who do you suppose has prepared your tea and toast, your beef tea, your custard and jelly, your dropped eggs, your dainties of all sorts, these three weeks?"

"Why, the cook, of course." "By no means. Winifred herself has prepared every mouthful she has brought you; she makes every loaf of bread and cake, every pudding and pie that is eaten in this house."

"You amaze me." "Why? Because she don't make a show of her work. Because she enjoys outdoor life after attending to her domestic duties. She is not only a good rider, and all that, but she is thoroughly and practically domestic."

Guy didn't say any more then but he did considerable thinking. A week later he said to Winifred: "I have not yet thanked you for saving my life, Miss Tremaine."

"Please say no more, Mr. Averill," she cried, hastily. "What else could I have done?"

"And I am not going to thank you until I know whether my rescued life is to be one of happiness or misery. Winifred, I love you very dearly! Can you love me a little? Can you consent to be my wife? If not—if you give me no hope—I shall blame you for not letting me drown that day. Just one word, darling!"

"I—I—I don't want to bear the blame, Guy."

And Guy did not blame her. Cassius Barclay always calls his wife's brother-in-law "Winifred's flotsam," and says:

"Helen, your sister's flotsam really is a little too good to have been left as food for the fishes."

AN HUMBLE PRINTER. How he got a Dutchman to Guess.

A Dutchman, sitting in the door of his tavern in the far West, is approached by a tall, thin Yankee, who is emigrating westward on foot, with a bundle hung on a cane over his shoulder.

"Vell, Mister Valking Stick, vat you vant?" inquired the Dutchman. "Rest and refreshment," replied the printer.

"Supper and lotchin' I reckon?" "Yes, supper and lodging, if you please."

"Pe ye a Yankee peddler, mid chawelry in your pack to sheet der gal?" "No, sir; I'm no Yankee peddler."

"A singin' master, too lazy to work?" "No sir."

"A shentel shoemaker, vot loves to measure der gals' feet and hankles better tan to make der shoes?" "No, sir, or I should have mended my own shoes."

"A book ahent, vot boddens der school committee till they do vot you wish choost to get rid of you?" "Guess again, sir, I am no book agent."
