

WATERLOO.

A Famous Battlefield.

The small town of Waterloo lies nearly ten miles to the southeast of the capital of Belgium, on the high road which passes through it and the plain on to Namur. The forest of Soignes, which commences some miles from Brussels, is nine miles long by seven broad, and extends round three sides of the field of fight. The little village of Mont St. Jean—a short straggling street of cottages, with their carbaret—nearer the field. Hence the French named the battle not that of Waterloo but of Mont St. Jean. Some distance in advance of this hamlet the ground swells gently into a long, low ridge, running right and left, which bounds one side of the gently sloping plain.

At the time of the battle a large hedge ran along the ridge in the direction of Ohan. It is just a mile between this slope (the British position) and those at the opposite side of the plain, which are covered with wood and higher—especially in the direction of Planchenois. This sloping interval was the scene of the contest.

The ground to the right front of Mont St. Jean is much changed since the 18th of June, 1815. Thus on a portion of the arena occupied by the allied armies now rises the Belgian monument—a huge pyramidal mound of earth, 150 feet high, with a colossal lion, formed of captured cannon, on the summit, looking toward France; and there are other minor alterations.

In the woody country to the left of the British position of Wavre, whence the Prussians advanced. Looking from the ridge in front of Mont St. Jean, down the road which runs through the plain, on the right side is seen the large farmhouse La Haye Sainte; and three-quarters of a mile in advance on the same side is the Chateau of Hougmont, with its little patch of wood orchard and garden. The large gate of the farmhouse long bore marks of the grape-shot once imbedded in it.

In its rear was a small orchard, which was the scene of several desperate struggles—as that between the Life Guards and the French, and where Shaw, the Life Guardsman, who had been a pugilist—a man of great stature and strength—told down eight French men through their helmets, and finally fell, pierced through the back by a French lance. At the opposite side of the road was a place known as the Sandpits—a place from which sand had been dug to some depth, which was occupied by sharpshooters, thrown out in advance and where later the German Legion was almost annihilated.

After the fighting at Ligny and Quatre Bras Blucher concentrated his forces near Wavre, and Wellington fell back on Waterloo. The English general occupied the farmhouse, La Haye Sainte and Hougmont, and advanced positions, and had the walls of the latter crested for musketry, which dealt such destruction on the advancing French that in half an hour fifteen hundred men were killed in the orchard. The posts were thus turned into forts to engage and break the impetuous onsets of French cavalry.

To the left, and a little in advance near the point where a little country road crossed the high road, is the spot where Wellington is said to have stood; but he was, of course, much about the field during the battle. The Allies, forming a long curve, were positioned nearly three quarters of a mile in the rear, of the farmhouse of La Haye Sainte and Hougmont. The long, wooded ridges, and slopes opposite to them formed the French position.

The passion for high play in certain circles of European society is leading to some singular developments. Prince Demidoff lately lost the trifling sum of $1,600,000 to Count Schouvaloff (most aptly named) at baccarat in one sitting. The affair being brought to the notice of the Czar, he has commanded the lucky count to return seven-eighths of his winnings, observing very justly "that he might be very well satisfied with having gained $200,000 in a game of cards." And the Russian account proceeds: It is needless to say that his majesty's commands were carried out to the letter.

WHY FORNEY IS FOR HANCOCK.

GARFIELD'S SELECTION WAS A BLUNDER WORSE THAN A CRIME.

Having decided to support Hancock for President of the United States, however, I find that there is another audience not quite as anxious to hear what I have to say; that one decides against me in advance. The parties to this proceeding are gentlemen who think that it is an offense for an independent Republican to have any voice in public affairs that is not set to the chorus of the Republican ring. As long as you sing in their choir, and echo their sentiments and obey the covenants, you are a saint; but if you utter a discordant note you are a traitor. I am a traitor now because I do not swing the censor to General Garfield. I am inconsistent because I spoke well of Garfield after his nomination for President. I am glad I did. His nomination was a relief from the men who assassinated Grant at Chicago. Garfield was better than the office-holding and office-hunting politicians who, after hunting down the lion, expected to drink his blood, to feed upon his fame and to rally the party he had saved twice from ruin to their support. Garfield was better than the hypocrites who, howling civil service and holding up a third term, as they said, sought the Presidency only for themselves, after having been longer in office than four times the length of one term. But I did not know General Garfield's record; I had never examined it. It was not my business to keep a list of his jobs. I have not been five times in Washington in ten years, and I do know what the new leaders of the Republican party have done—certainly not their secret work to help themselves. Till his nomination for President the country was almost as ignorant as myself. What it is all men know now, and if I revolted from what it was because I found it different from what I honestly believed it to be. General Garfield's accusers were not Democrats. He was brought to the bar by his own party, by the Republican press and the Republicans of his own county, by the Republican committees of his own Congressional district, by the Republican Congress of which he was a member and by a Republican court of justice. Had this record been known at Chicago General Garfield could not have been nominated. Full information enables me to speak by the book when I assert that there was not a Republican leader of any note, equally those on the ground to slay and those who came to save Grant, that did not admit, on reflection, that Garfield's selection was a blunder and that blunder worse than a crime.—Forney's Progress.

THE RAILROAD ACROSS THE PENINSULA

A correspondent of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening, writing from Georgetown, Del., says: The Old Dominion Steamship Company has received advice from Boston that there is a quantity of railroad iron to be shipped to Harrington in a short time, and have been asked for rates from New York upon it. It is supposed that the iron will be used in the construction of the proposed new road from Queenstown, on the Chesapeake bay, near Chestertown, to Harrington. A number of Boston capitalists are interested in this project, and recently some large subscriptions were obtained in Baltimore to the stock of the company. The road when completed, if it ever is, will make a new route from the South to New York via the J. and B. railroad and steamers from Lewes. A meet of capitalists was recently held in Boston and it was determined to have a survey of the route made. This has since been done, and the proposed shipment of iron is another evidence that the road is really to be built.

A THIEF'S BOLDNESS

Le Temps, of the sixth of July, gives some very interesting details concerning a notorious Parisian thief, Killer who after two years' defiance of the police detectives has at last been arrested. Instead of endeavoring to evade the law by flight to England or America, Killer was content with putting only about fifteen miles between himself and his pursuers. He coolly established himself at Bouffemont, in the vale of Montmorency, where assuming the name of M. Jules Allain, he bought a house, which he repaired and furnished luxuriously. This did not satisfy the new capitalist. He decided to increase his wealth and social importance, and to that end purchased some land of a Mr. Montignon, close to a gentleman's private estate, and solicited and obtained from the prefecture the necessary authorization for setting up a brick-yard there.

The first performances of the thief in his new trade were disastrous in their effects; the sulphurous emanations from the oven blasted the nurseries in its immediate neighborhood, and the estate of the above mentioned gentleman suffered especial damage. He felt obliged to complain; the pseudo-Allain presented himself before the legal functionaries with the utmost nonchalance, but he lost his case and was compelled to reconstruct his oven with some reference to the property rights of his neighbors. This he did with such intelligence and alacrity that a succession of accidents ensued which made him a terror to the neighborhood, and this went on for some eight months, but one fine morning it was discovered that he had decamped during the night with his personal wealth, leaving what he called his "works" to a young man whom he had previously taken into partnership.

The most curious feature in all this curious story is that Killer is one of those persons who would be readily recognized among 20,000 by any one who had once seen him. He is only four feet in height and dwarfs are not so common even in France that they can not be readily distinguished, while they generally have distinct peculiarities of feature. Had the French journals published a description of his personal appearance the versatile career of Killer most probably would have been checked previous to his easy establishment as a capitalist brickmaker and burned of his neighbor's luxuriant pine and spruce nurseries.

A DONKEY'S DEEP GRIEF

Newspapers have often told stories about the affection that dogs, horses and other animals had for each other, but we have never heard of a jackass being accused of any such tender sentiments. It is now our duty to record the faithful love one donkey had for a companion who had shared his lot for so long. Last week W. D. Wasson went out to Tioga District on a prospecting expedition, taking two jacks along to pack his blankets, tools and provisions. In coming down the mountain, one of the long-eared freight transporters fell over a precipice and broke his neck. The other frightened the birds and the cones in their burrows with the sound of his lamentations. Mr. Wasson tried to coax the grief-stricken barge away but the donkey only lifted up his voice and wept, and would not be comforted. Then he essayed to drive with sticks and stones the noisy beast of lament. But drive he would not. The donkey remembered how he and his beloved companion had foraged together from handy clothes lines, had, in friendship masticated fence posts and sections of barbed wire, and had contentedly nibbled such tender morsels as old gummy-sacks and east of overalls, or assauged keen hunger with old boots and oyster cans, and could not be induced to leave the spot. Then the cruel master beat him terribly; still his grief nerved him to obstinacy. The master felled two or three large trees on his back but to no purpose. Finally the master, in despair, took the pack off, and left him with the dead. The last seen of him he was eating the cropping of a quartz ledge and weeping for his friend.—Mining Index.

HANCOCK AT CHERUBUSCO. RAPHAEL SEMMI'S ACCOUNT OF THE YOUNG LIEUTENANT'S VALOR.

It was in the hot fight for the bridge at Cherubusco that Lieut. Hancock won his first brevet. The day was perfectly clear, but the smoke, as it rose over the heads of the combatants, formed a deep canopy that partially obscured the sun, and reflected back the vivid flashes of the guns as they belched fire and iron from the frowning fortification upon the advancing ranks. Then it was that it became the duty of the Sixth infantry to charge straight through the hell of fire upon the works in front of them.

The rest of the brigade was ordered to move by the flank, parallel to the road through the fields; the Sixth was ordered directly up the road to storm the terre de pont. Lieut. Hancock's company, Capt. Hoffman in command, led this terrible charge. The Mexicans in the work, whose attention up to this time had been directed to the troops advancing through the corn on either flank, seeing the gallant Sixth making this direct assault turned all their guns upon it. Some of the men recoiled under the sweeping stroke of the artillery, but the officers rallied them, and with a shout they again rushed forward. But it was not to be done.

The awful storm of lead and iron that poured down and across that causeway permitted no living thing to stand against it. In the words of a staff officer's report, "the Sixth infantry was met by so destructive a fire, ripping and cutting its ranks in pieces, that it was forced to recoil and fall back; which, however, was done with the coolness of a parade." Gen. Worth, who was with the advance on the flank, shouted to Lieut. Hancock's company to leave the deadly causeway and incline to the right into the corn. Then, while still under a galling fire, they dashed past a double ditch, the deep, wet ditch that surrounded the work, and carried it with the bayonet, Lieut. Hancock by the side of his captain, leading his men to the embrasure and over the walls without the help of ladders. The enemy could not withstand the shock, but gave way; and in a moment more the cheers that rang out gave notice to the brave fellows fighting along down the line that the key to the battlefield had been taken.

THE GERMAN COUNTESS.

One thing which caused me much perplexity was the effort I was constantly making to reconcile the de facto German countess with that haughty creature who, wearing a coronet of diamonds on her lofty brow, trails her velvet robes through her ancestral halls—on the stage and in Marlitt's novels. The ancestral halls are certainly there, and the coronet, in some form or other, is omnipresent. One sees it carved upon the furniture, engraved upon the plate, embroidered upon every conceivable article from a handkerchief to a dust-cloth, embossed upon every button of every male servant's livery, and branded conspicuously upon the wooden shovels and buckets in use about the place. I should not have been surprised to see it in reposso upon the shells of the eggs served at Abendbrod. In short, it is everywhere except upon the place it was originally intended to adorn, where it appears only on occasions of state.

But the German countess, according to my observation, is a plain, domestic creature, who trots briskly about during the forenoon hours, attired in a simple short dress, with big apron and snowy cap, a heavy key-basket jingling in her hand. She arranges to the minutest detail the meals of the family, the servants of the house, and the laborers in the court, all of whom receive a separate bill of fare. Every article required in the preparation of these meals, even to the salt is carefully weighed out. Each servant has so much sugar, tea, and coffee per week, which he can consume at his pleasure. That this alone is a laborious task every housekeeper will admit. At dinner the countess appears freshly, but still simply dressed. After dinner she is seen with knitting in hand, or a great basket of mending by her side, working with as much assiduity as any American housewife, hardly allowing herself as much time for reading or recreation. Each napkin, towel, etc., is held up against the light, and rigidly inspected; each thin place, even in the coarsest crash towel for kitchen use, is carefully darned. I was much amused, at one place where I visited, to see the daughter of the house, fresh from boarding-school, going through this process with a great basket of linen, under the supervision of her mother. I remarked, rather in the way of self-congratulation, that in America we made ourselves less trouble.

"What!" exclaimed the lady, "you do not mend your linen?" "Not the kitchen towels at all events," I ventured to answer.

"Oh, Frau S—!" exclaimed the young girl, with melodramatic fervor. "Take me to America with you! A land where one need not darn the kitchen towels must be heavenly!"

HANCOCK'S CHANCE IN OHIO

Judge Hoody, of Cincinnati, visited Gen. Hancock to-day, and also called at the National Democratic Headquarters. There he said: "I wish to be understood as saying emphatically that Gen. Hancock's prospects in the Buckeye State are bright. I can promise a certain victory for the Democrats in the Presidential election if they will do their duty in the ordinary work of the campaign."

"So you are of the opinion that Garfield will lose his own State?" "Yes; his friends will have to do some very hard work if he succeed in turning the tide that has set in for Hancock everywhere. Hancock is very popular among all classes of men in our section of the country. The old soldiers are enthusiastic for him. The farmers and mechanics can find no fault with his record, and the politicians of both parties honor him as a man. When it was announced that the Democratic Convention had nominated him for the Presidency, a wave of enthusiasm rolled from Cincinnati to the remotest rural section."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MISS NEILSON'S DEATH.

Miss Adelaide Neilson, who died in Paris Sunday morning, was driving in the Bois de Boulogne on Saturday evening when she was seized with sudden illness and was conveyed to the nearest restaurant, where she expired. Her remains will be buried in Brompton Cemetery, London, at the end of the week. A post-mortem examination attributes the death of Miss Neilson to dropsy of the heart, accelerated by extreme indigestion.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News, says: "Miss Neilson's death is attributed to drinking a cup of lead milk, which a medical writer in a Paris journal says is very indigestible. Miss Neilson was twelve hours in mortal agony. Her body was claimed at the morgue by an aged naval officer."

COMPLETION OF THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY R. R.

Col. Stewart, superintendent of track-laying of the Shenandoah Valley Railroad Company, informs us that with fair weather he will drive the last spike to-morrow (Tuesday) evening, thus finishing this road from Hagerstown to the Valley of Virginia. Thus Hagerstown receives another railroad, the most important of the four which we will then have. An excursion to Charlestown, W. Va., will take place over the Cumberland Valley and Shenandoah Valley roads from Harrisburg on Friday next, the 13th inst., under the auspices of the Second Baptist Church of that city. Regular trains will commence about September 1.

A BRITISH LION

One of the most remarked figures now in London is the secretary of the American legation. Mr. Steinway is a Kentuckian, six feet eight in height, and as straight as a rush; thin, bony, muscular, 50 years of age, with the most wonderful typical Yankee face and general aspect it is possible to conceive. There is something almost ridiculous in the realization here, is though a Kentuckian, of the Yankee Fenec. When he stands in a room, full head and shoulders over everybody, all eyes are on him. As a witty Irish M. P. said, the lean giant looks hollow enough to swallow any quantity of principles. He knows he is a remarkable figure and meets the amused and admiring glances with a sly twinkle of the eye which seems to come down from the stars.

Engineer Aitkin, of the second section of the train, which ran into the first, testified that he had never used the automatic brake before the accident; that he had been accustomed to the Westinghouse brake, but the automatic was put on his train that morning, and when he applied it, a mile and a half from the scene of the accident, it would not work, and he whistled the train-men to put on the hand brakes. They were going very slowly when they struck the first section. A passenger testified that in his opinion the train could have been stopped if sand and steam had been properly applied. The engineer said his sand-box was open before the collision.

What true Democrat or Conservative can consent to be led by that will-o'-the-wisp, Gen. Mahone, in face of the danger to which he is luring them?

Why, this same WILLIAMS C. WICKAM is the very man whom JNO. ECHOLS, first man on the Funder electoral ticket, tried last winter to have elected to the United States Senate over Gen. MAHONEY, a true and tried Democrat.

What true Democrat or Conservative can consent to be led by that will-o'-the-wisp, Gen. Mahone, in face of the danger to which he is luring them?

What's in a name? In the absence of the editor, we shall take the opportunity of saying that in our opinion the Conservative party organization ought to have been abandoned as soon as the Debt question became a prominent one in the State.

Why don't you cite some Democratic States where a tax-paying qualification is required of voters? Do we in Virginia want to learn the true science of government from Radical Republican States?

As to our having been a warm advocate of MAHONEY'S railroad policy, he is mistaken. We never wrote anything for or against that policy; because we knew nothing about it.

"THE ALLIANCE."

Mr. Massey in his speech at Farmville the other day admitted that he would support the Republican-Readjuster candidate for Congress in that district in preference to Col. Samuel F. Coleman, the regular nominee of the Democratic party.

It thus appears that Col. Cameron and Mr. Massey, and we presume all the rest of the leaders of the Mahone party, would rather vote to send a republican to Congress than a Debt-Paying Democrat!

What a convenient memory the Dispatch has. It has forgotten the "Alliance," we suppose, that was made in the Albemarle Senatorial district last fall between Gen. DUKE the candidate of the Funder-Conservative party for the House of Delegates and E. W. EARLY the Funder-Radical Republican candidate for the State Senate.

The editor, associated with the late Logan, who conducted the campaign of last year so admirably, now holds the position then held by the lamented Logan, and feels that he may, without arrogance, claim to have an experience that authorizes him to say that the disastrous results of last November were incurred solely through the neglect to publish such a paper as the Motor—edited by one whose influence as a writer has been limited only by the disinclination or disability of the public to pay for his effusions.

On the 26th day of September 1879, the following article appeared in the Chronicle. The Conservative-Funders of Charlottesville and Albemarle county were then trying to beat JNO. E. MASSEY, a Conservative-Readjuster, with E. W. EARLY, a Radical-Funder. See what the Chronicle then said:

What's in a name? In the absence of the editor, we shall take the opportunity of saying that in our opinion the Conservative party organization ought to have been abandoned as soon as the Debt question became a prominent one in the State.

The Staunton Congressional Convention.

The Staunton Virginian has this to say of the Funder Convention which met at Staunton and nominated Judge H. C. Allen, of Shenandoah, against Hon John Paul for Congress:

"It was the loneliest, most forlorn, looking set of men our little city has harbored for many a day. A deep bereavement had been experienced, and there were those who resented to be comforted. Towards noon the cause of this unwanted depression had become generally known. The Hon. John T. Harris had positively declined to again be a candidate and had assured the delegates, one by one, that if nominated by acclamation, he would not accept."

"Harris had declined; who would accept? If he gives it up, reasoned they, what chance has any one else? Would White accept? For the man who undertakes to meet Paul, must be bold as a lion and always ready? Would Bangardner enter the field and sliver his dusty lance against the doughty knight of Rockingham? Would Gray, of Fluvanna, Liggett or Moffett, of Rockingham, Duke of Albemarle, or Hanger, or Echols, of Augusta, take up the gauntlet? All these were suggested; but each of those present had an excuse; one had a yoke of oxen to prove, another his fields to look after, another had married a wife, and so on through the list. For once the Democratic nomination in the Seventh district of Virginia went a-begging; the prize so eagerly sought after in times past was to be had for the asking, and yet no one petitioned.

In the meantime the wires had been busy, and Judge H. C. Allen, of Shenandoah, who had been induced to take up the cause, and so the die was cast. Taken altogether it was about the sickliest convention ever held in the Seventh district."

A leadville man fell over a bluff, and if he hadn't been drunk he would have been killed, and if he hadn't been drunk he wouldn't have fallen over the bluff. You can make the occurrence point whichever moral you choose.

An Elopement Spoiled.

RALIGH, N. C., August 12.—Information has been received here of a terrible tragedy in Franklin county by which Elam Wester, a young farmer, who was acting as the best man at a runaway wedding, had two loads of buck-shot put into his left breast. It seems that Wester's intimate friend Mr. Haverlock Styles, has for some time past been in love with Miss Ophelia Upchurch, the daughter of Benjamin Upchurch, a well-to-do farmer in Nash county. The young lady returned his affection, but the father would not give his consent and the parties agreed upon an elopement. Wester and Styles met the young lady and carried her to Nash county, got the license and were quietly married. Just after the ceremony was concluded Mr. Upchurch, armed with a double-barreled shot-gun, rode up. He leveled it at Wester and fired the two barrels, charged with buckshot into the young man's left breast. Wester fell without saying a word. Styles fled to the woods, leaving his newly made bride to the mercies of the enraged father, who carried her home. All the parties lived in Nash county.

Butler for Hancock.

BOSTON, August 19.—It was announced in the Democratic State Committee meeting to-night that General Butler, in his forthcoming speech, will declare for Hancock. The announcement was applauded, but it caused no surprise here, as it was generally expected that General Butler would come out for the Democracy, now that the Greenback party is practically dead. It was also said that he would speak in the doubtful States in the interest of Hancock. As it had already been stated that he would speak for the Fusionists in Maine, this assertion may not be regarded as news. The Republicans as a body may be said to be pleased with the announcement, which removes all disguises and places General Butler in his true light. The impression is that General Butler will be rewarded by the Democratic nomination for Governor.

A New York gentleman recently got a proposal of marriage from an "unknown" lady. He replied that his wife weighed 190 pounds and that she had opened the letter.

You will be sure to get the worth of your money, if you attend.

Pulaski Readjusters.

The Readjusters of Pulaski county held a meeting at Newbern on last Saturday to select delegates to the Congressional Convention at Abingdon. It was an off day and the crowd was not as large as it would have been on court day. Yet there were enough to make an excellent meeting, and indicate that the Readjusters of that county are going to stand squarely by the 7th of July electoral ticket. Those who participated in the meeting were, variously estimated at from 30 to 40. A solid Blair delegation to the Congressional Convention was chosen. The delegates were Mr. Colley, Howa Sayers, Esq., and Squire Reuben Rupe; P. H. McCaul, Wm. Shuwalter and Joseph Huffard were selected as alternates. Mr. J. B. Alexander and Judge J. P. McTeer were chosen delegates at large. Resolutions endorsing the action of the 7th of July Convention and pledging support to the Readjuster electoral ticket were passed. Several persons were called upon to speak, and there were several short and happy responses. P. H. McCaul, a former faithful Representative of the county in the House of Delegates, and now the efficient Clerk of that body, was pointed, forcible and zealous in his remarks. The meeting adjourned with an expression of good feeling, and a determination to give a good report from Pulaski.

Death of Hon. James A. Seddon.

Hon. James Alexander Seddon died this morning at his residence in Goochland county, after a painful illness. The sad event was not unlooked for by his friends and family, for he had been in declining health for some time past. From the time he was comparatively a young man until the close of the war he occupied a prominent place in the history of his native State, and as Secretary of War of the Confederate States Government, he was known throughout the South. Mr. Seddon was a descendant of William Alexander, of Menstrie, Scotland, first Earl of Sterling, and from whom came the honored Virginia family of that name. He was born in 1815, and as a young man distinguished himself at college. He came to this city at quite an early age and began the practice of law. In 1845 he was elected to Congress, defeating the Whig candidate, John Minor Botts. He was a member of the Peace Congress of February 4, 1861; was elected a delegate to the Congress of the Confederate States July 20, 1861; and made Secretary of War of the Confederate States on the resignation of Gen. George W. Randolph, November 18, 1862. In all these high positions he distinguished himself and won the entire confidence of the people he served so well. He married in 1846 Miss Sarah Bruce, of Halifax county, who survives him.—Rich. Dispatch.

Stockings at the Seashore.

A long Branch correspondent of the Syracuse Herald writes as follows concerning ladies' stockings, an article with which fashion has for some time been busy: "Stockings cannot well be left out of this letter, because they continue to be about the most important feature of Long Branch toilet. Black-legged belles are the latest novelty in this line, for jetty hose are now seen on the most advanced of the devotees of fashion. The color is a trying one for thin shanks, making them look thinner than ever. Their effect is striking in any case. They are usually lightened up by more or less of light embroidery at the instep and ankles, but on some of them needle work is done with black silk, and is discernible only on close inspection. A friend of mine held a wad of something in one hand, it was not so large but that she could close her fingers over it. I asked her what it was. 'A new pair of stockings,' she said. 'Stockings P' I echoed, incredulously. She showed them, and stockings they surely were, but of such a gossamer texture that they were of next to no bulk or weight at all. They were rather bright scarlet in color—too bright, I remarked. 'Oo, they look so new,' the young lady said, 'but they won't be when they are on. See that, and she stretched one over her pump, white arm; the skin fairly shows through, and makes the stocking a very light pink.'

The Connecticut Canvass.

The Democrats of Connecticut have nominated an excellent State ticket. English for Governor and Pond for Lieutenant-Governor form a popular combination that will inspire enthusiasm during the campaign by giving assurance of victory at the ballot boxes. The ticket will call to the polls the whole strength of the Democracy, and win a large share of the independent voters.

Connecticut is a close and rather doubtful State. In 1876 it gave Tilden a majority of 2,900. Two years later Andrew, the Republican candidate for Governor, obtained a plurality of 2,400 over Hubbard, Democrat. This was chiefly due to the fact that Atwater, the Greenback nominee for Governor received 8,400 votes, which were mainly cast by Democrats. The present emergency is too serious for the repetition of this folly. The great parties will resume their old position, and the contest will be waged in the usual way. We therefore regard the State as sure for Hancock in November.

In his notorious Greenback speech at Lynchburg, in 1878, Major John W. Daniel quoted the following, with approval, from the work of Mr. Wm. A. Berkly: "The act of Congress of March 12, 1866, was adopted on recommendation of Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury. It gave him unlimited control over the finances of the country, and he did not fail to use the power placed in his hands, to the fullest extent, in aiding the money power, with which he was in league, to rob the country and the people. When McCulloch's infamous betrayal of the high trust reposed in him becomes fully understood, his name will be used as a by-word and reproach throughout the nation."

And this McCulloch is the man whom Major Daniel now worships as the High Priest of Virginia Funderism! And yet in the same speech already cited he had spoken of McCulloch's financial policy as follows: "Contraction has squeezed the essence out; the people in the hands of capital have been compressed like a lemon—and only the rind of stunted homes and blighted fields is left us!"

In this same speech Major Daniel said: "Pay off all United States bonds in paper which were contracted to be so paid, to maintain State credit." And he added: "The iniquitous measures of Federal finance have brought Virginia to the verge of repudiation.—Why?"

The Rev. Joseph Cook was robbed of his gold watch while on his way to Chauqua from the East. He remarked "Protoplasm!" on discovering his loss.

SPECIAL NOTICE!

SALE EXTRAORDINARY BY THALHIMER BROTHERS.

In consequence of greatly increased patronage we have been obliged to discontinue our regular business.

For the accommodation of our trade and a proper display of our goods, we have accordingly rented that Large, Commodious and Well-Lighted Store, at the corner of High and Broad Streets, now occupied by Messrs. A. P. Fox & Son, and which will be still further beautified and especially fitted up to suit our wants.

OUR INTENTION is to remove on the 1st of October, but before leaving from our present stand (at the corner of High and Broad Streets) we are determined to close out our entire stock and start at the new stand with a new and fresh supply.

Knowing how difficult it is to dispose of an accumulation of stock of Dry Goods without making a sacrifice, we are prepared to say that the sacrifice will be made, and the goods must be sold.

Our assortment of Dry Goods is as complete as any that can be shown in the city.

We do not expect in a resolute sale, like this to sell a big lot of goods at their value for them, but will sell them for what they will bring irrespective of cost or value.

THE FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

USES OF LIME IN FARMING

From an Irish agricultural paper we take the following summary of the uses of lime:

Thousands of lime are in part mechanical and part chemical.

1. Upon deep alluvial and clay soil it increases the crop of potatoes, and renders them less waxy. Sprinkled over potatoes to a store heap, when both the potatoes and the lime are in a dry state, it preserves them, and when riddled over the cut sets at planting time it wonderfully increases their vitality.

2. Lime eradicates the finger and toe disease in turnips, and helps to give greater firmness to the bulbs.

3. It gives when applied to meadow land a larger product by producing more nutritious grasses, also helping to exterminate the seeds of mosses and aquatic plants.

4. Upon arable land it destroys weeds of various kinds.

5. It rapidly decomposes vegetable matter, producing, a large amount of food for plants in the form of carbonized elements.

6. It destroys and neutralizes the acids in the soil, hence its adaptability to some lands.

7. It acts powerfully upon some of the organic parts of the soil, especially upon sulphate of, magnesia and alumina.

8. It proves fatal to worms and slugs, and the larvae of insects, though favorable to the growth of shell bearers.

9. Slacked lime added to vegetable matter causes it to give off its nitrogen in the form of ammonia. Upon soils in which ammonia is combined with acids, it sets free the ammonia, which is seized upon by the growing plants.

10. Its solubility in water causes it to sink into and ameliorate the sub-soil. When the soil contains fragments of granite or trap rock, lime hastens their decomposition and liberates their constituents.

11. Its combination with the acids in the soil produces saline compounds such as potash and soda, which immediately enter into plant growth.

12. Strawn over plants it destroys or renders uncomfortable the location of numerous species of insects which prey on the surface—notably the turnip fly.

13. Worked in with grass seeds the beneficial effect of lime, chalk, marl and shell sand—into the composition of all of which lime largely enters—it has been known to produce visible effect for upwards of thirty years.

Applied to manure, lime serves to destroy the seeds of various weeds, the larvae of insects, and otherwise exercises a very beautiful effect in the liberation of organic constituents, and then assists in their combination with other and more useful forms of plant food.

Washing Butter.—A few years ago an earnest controversy was carried on as to whether butter should be washed or unwashed, those advocating the latter claiming that by pressing or working out the buttermilk without the aid of water it served to retain more of the aroma and delicious flavor naturally belonging to butter, and which should not be removed by allowing the butter, to come in contact with water.

Seed Wheat.—Mr. Geddes:—“If farmers would exercise as much care in selecting seed wheat as they do in corn there would be less running out.” This is a fact, and I am surprised that more farmers do not see it. In my experiments with corn, I have tenaciously held the fact that the top ear bears the only seed suitable to plant; and as tenaciously do I hold that there is only one head in each stool of wheat perfect enough to keep it from deteriorating. Another reason why wheats run out is that as long as farmers take their seed from the common granary, so long will it diminish in yield. They may sift it, sling it across the barn floor, and run it through a hundred sieves, and it will still degenerate. Not until they exercise the patience and science of hand-picking a bushel or two every year from the top heads of the best stools, and sowing them alone on some choice lot for seed the following year, will they escape the degenerating influences of bad, unremunerative crops. Wheat is so remarkably sensitive that it receives the slightest attention most kindly; and, on the other hand, the presence of any foreign plant (even another kind of wheat), weed, fly, bug or worm, takes from its life to such a degree that every farmer loses many bushels annually.

Many Physicians are prescribing Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup because they know it is a good remedy for children and is warranted not to contain either Opium, Morphia, Paregoric or Laudanum the basis of the usual soothing remedies.

ARM AND HAMMER BRAND
CONDENSED MILK
ABSOLUTELY PURE

Impure El-Carb Soda is of a slightly dirty white color. It may appear white, examined by the test but it is not. WHEELER'S CHURCH & CO'S "ARM AND HAMMER" BRAND will show the difference.

See that your Baking Soda is white and PURE, as should be ALL SWISS SUBSTANCES used for food.

A simple but severe test of the comparative value of different brands of Soda is to dissolve a dessert spoonful of each kind with about a pint of water (not preferred) in clear glasses, stirring until all is thoroughly dissolved. The solution is made to master in the inferior Soda will be shown after setting some twenty minutes or longer by the milky appearance of the solution and the quantity of floating lumps matter according to quality.

Be sure and ask for Church & Co's Soda and get their name on the package and you will get the purest and whitest made. The use of this with your milk, in preference to baking powder, saves twenty times its cost.

See one pound package for valuable information and read carefully.
