A Good Story.

THE MYSTERIOUS FORGERY.

It was a black October morning, and Mr. Walter Crump, cashier to the firm of Messrs. Livesey & Mason, quickened his pace as he made his way along Throgmorton street to the scene of his daily toil. It was not that he feared to be late that Mr. Crump had never been known to be late for his work. A more methodical, careful man never hung over a ledger or balanced a cash-book.

At length he reached the well-known store, opened the office door, and stood still for a moment in surprise. Young Carter, the assistant book-keeper was before him, already at his work. Mr. Crump smiled grimly.

"So you've made a beginning, young man," he said. "Well, we'll see." Carter's face flushed a little as he bade the older man good-morning. The fact was that Crump, who had married rather late in life, had a bright-eyed daughter named Annie, with whom Robert Carter had fallen very much in love. It was only on the preceding evening that things had come to a crisis, and, somewhat to the young man's surprise, Mr. Crump had rejected the proposed engagement. He did not like young Carter. He did not approve of the young fellow's fashionably cut collars, nor of his scarf-pin, nor of his cane. Such things, Mr. Crump considered, were the signs of a frivolous disposition and unsteady habits. Nor did Mr. Crump approve of the snatches of comic songs which Carter was continually humming. He suspected that the young man frequented music halls, and spent more money on cheap cigars, novels, and outings than was proper for one in his position. Besides, Mr. Robert Carter was usually the last of all the clerks to make his appearance in the morning, and this was, in Mr. Crump's eyes, a very bad sign. It plain to the old man that Carter was now making an attempt to earn his good opinion.

"Time will show—time will show," said Mr. Crump in rather an aggravating way, as he changed his coat, opening his desk, unlocked his safe and set about his work. Soon the other clerks began to arrive, and then came Mr. Mason, the acting partner, a tall, pale man, with long black whiskers. Mr. Livesey, the senior partner, only came to the office twice a week to examine the bank-book and see how things were going on. Mr. Mason opened the letters, and soon appeared at Mr. Crump's desk with a small sheaf of them in his hand. These were letters in response to which small sums of money had to be sent, and it belonged to Mr. Crump to attend to them, for he had authority to sign checks for the firm for sums up to five pounds.

Mr. Crump first made a list of the payments he had to make, and then went to his safe for check-book. As he opened it to write the first check he was surprised to find that the counterfoil belonging to the last check which had been taken from the book was not filled up. He could hardly believe his eyes. Never in all his life had he written a check without first filling up the counterfoil with particulars of the amount, the date, and the person to whom the check was sent.

But his surprise changed to dismay when he took out his cash book and found that he had only drawn nine checks the day before, the counterfoils of which were all properly filled up, whereas a tenth check had been torn out of the book.

For a moment he sat as if stunned. Could any one have stolen the blank check?

He always kept the key of his safe on his own bunch, but it was just possible that some one might have got hold of the keys, taken an impression of it in wax, and had a false key.

He had heard of such things. He leaned his head on his hands and tried to think.

When had he closed the safe last night? About 4 in the afternoon, before any one had left the office for the day; for he remembered that he had been sent to the docks about 4 o'clock with some documents for a ship that was about to sail, and that when he got back at half-past 5 every body had left, and the place was in darkness.

If the blank check had been stolen the theft must have been committed last night—or this morning.

Could the safe have been opened before his arrival?

He remembered Carter's unusually early appearance, and threw a suspicious glance at the young man.

Then a simpler solution of the matter occurred to him. It was very possible that, in tearing out the last check he had drawn the day before, he had torn out two by mistake, folded them up, and sent them off together.

This would, of course account for the appearance of the check book.

He determined at once to write to Marshall & Co., merchants in Liverpool, to whom he had sent his last check, and ask whether a blank check had not been sent them by mistake.

The question arose—should he mention the circumstance to Mason? On consideration Crump thought that it was not necessary to do so.

Mason was rather a hard man to deal with, and a confession would ruin the character for carefulness which the cashier had so long enjoyed. And he fully expected that in two days at most he would get a letter from Liverpool, enclosing the slip of paper which had cost him so much anxiety.

The next day was Tuesday, and according to his invariable custom on that day of the week, Livesey made his appearance in the office. Business had not long commenced when everybody was aware that something unusual had happened.

Mason was closeted with his partner for a few minutes, and then went hurriedly out of the office, returning shortly afterward with Jeffreys, manager of the London and Lancaster Bank, at which the firm kept their account.

Then Jeffreys left and came back, accompanied by one of the cashiers. Then a bell was rung, and Crump sent for.

With a beating heart and a cold sweat on his brow the cashier obeyed the summons.

"Bring your check book, Crump," said the senior partner.

This was done, and a tall man, whom Crump had not noticed up to that time, stepped up to the table and glanced at the check book along with Livesey.

"I thought so," exclaimed the old gentleman. "Here's the place from which the check was taken; here is the counterfoil. The numbers correspond. What made you do it, Crump? You are the last man in the world from whom I would have suspected such conduct?"

"Do what, sir?" faintly uttered Crump.

"Do what?" echoed his employer with a contemptuous smile. "Who did you get to do this little bit of work for you?"

As he spoke Livesey tossed a check across the table. Crump took it up and read;

The London & Lancaster Bank: Pay Jos. Beckman, or order, Three thousand one hundred and seventy two pounds fifteen shillings. Livesey & Mason.

He looked up bewildered. The tall man in the frock coat watched him narrowly.

Who is this Beckman? asked Livesey.

"I don't know sir." "You don't know! You see that the check has come from your book?"

"Yes sir."

"Did you give it to any one?"

"No."

"Did you miss it?"

"Yes, I missed it yesterday; and I wrote to see, to whom I had sent the one before that, thinking that I had torn out two by mistake."

"That rather points to your innocence," whispered Livesey to the tall man at his elbow.

"It may be a clever plant, sir," returned the other.

"You did not put the letter among the others to be copied in the letter-book," put in Mason.

Crump hung his head.

"Is the check—" he began, after a pause.

"Of course it is forged," answered Livesey.

"And was it paid?"

"Yes, it was paid yesterday."

Mr. Crump shuddered, took a long breath, and waited.

"Now, Crump, you had better make a clean breast of it, said Mr. Livesey, after few moments' silence.

"Tell us who this man Beckman is; tell us where the money has gone—it can't be all spent already—and it will be none the worse for you."

Mr. Crump felt a shocking sensation in his throat; but he plucked up courage enough to say, "I have told you already, sir, that I know nothing about it. It was only yesterday morning that I noticed that a check had been taken from the book."

"Why did you not mention it?" asked Mr. Mason.

"I thought I had torn it out myself along with the one I sent to Mr. Marshall."

"But it may have been torn out by any one in the office during the day before?"

"Yes, sir, replied Crump. 'I don't see how any one could have got at the book, for I am very careful; but it is possible.'

"The thief has probably got a professional forger to copy the signature from an old letter, said Mr. Mason, taking up the slip of paper. 'It is beautifully imitated. I would not have detected it myself.'

"It is plain that the thief must have been some one in the office, though probably he had an accomplice outside," said Mr. Jeffreys. "A stranger would not have known that the firm had so large a balance at the moment. Is there any one of your fellow-clerks whom you think may have a hand in it?" he added, turning to the cashier.

"No, sir."

"Is there any one who keeps loose company, or any one who is in the habit of spending too much money?"

Mr. Crump thought of Carter, and hesitated for a moment.

"Speak, sir, if you are wise," said Mr. Livesey, sternly.

"I have sometimes thought that Mr. Carter spent a good deal on dress, and so on; but not more than many young men," replied Mr. Crump. But as he spoke he suddenly remembered Robert Carter's unusually early appearance on the preceding morning, and a suspicion arose in his mind. Without intending it he allowed his thoughts to appear in his face, so that his protest—"I know nothing whatever against Mr. Carter"—had but little effect.

Crump was sent back to his desk, and Carter was sent for. He came back to the clerk's room in a state of great indignation, having strenuously denied any knowledge whatever of the forgery. The result of a consultation between the bank manager and the partners was that as Crump could not account for the loss of the check, he had probably stolen it; and that, although there was not evidence enough to prosecute him, he must be dismissed at once. As to Carter, they determined to allow him to remain where he was and keep a close watch on his proceedings.

Poor Walter Crump went home that day like one in a dream. He was dismissed as the accomplice of a forger. And he could not say that, in the circumstances, he had been treated unjustly. The check had been entrusted to him, and he had lost it. It was, apparently, at least, his fault that the crime had been committed. He almost wondered that he had not been sent to prison.

When he reached his own house he sat down in front of the fire without speaking, and ever his favorite daughter Annie could not make him say what troubled him. How could he tell his children that he, their father, had been dismissed from his situation on suspicion of having robbed his employers of £3,000.

TO BE CONTINUED.

An Executive Session.

She was the daughter of a Senator and her sweetheart had been to see her every night for some time. Her father became somewhat alarmed, and this morning he called her into his study.

"Well, papa, she said sweetly, 'you sent for me. What is it?'"

"My dear daughter, he replied, 'I believe Mr. Blank has been to see you every night for some time past?'"

"Yes, papa."

"And he was here last night?"

"Yes, papa."

"Well, daughter, I want to know what occurred between you during your protracted interview in the parlor. I ask it, my child, because I have especial reasons for wishing to know."

"Dear papa, replied the girl with tears in her eyes, 'I do not doubt your right to ask what occurred there, but, papa, it was executive session; and, papa, you would not have me divulge the secrets of such a meeting, would you?'"

The old man never said a word in reply.

Making it Binding.

"I am a lawyer's daughter, you know, George dear," she said, after George had proposed and had been accepted, "and you wouldn't think it strange if I were to ask you to sign a little paper to the effect that we are engaged, would you?"

George was too happy to think anything strange just then, and he signed the paper with a trembling hand and a bursting heart.

Then she laid her ear against his middle vest button and they were very happy.

"Tell me, darling," said George, after a long delicious silence, "why did you want me to sign that paper? Do you not repose implicit confidence in my love for you?"

"Oh, yes," she sighed with infinite content, "indeed I do; but George, dear, I have been fooled so many times."—Life.

His arm will, perhaps, not have to be amputated.

Ball players are talking about an amateur catcher, who was remarkable for catching many batsmen out on foul tips even when the bat didn't seem to strike within three inches of the ball. An investigation revealed that the catcher had a gum band attached to his glove, and when he desired to foul out a man he would raise the band with one finger, and when the ball passed under the bat released it. The band would snap against the glove, and all within hearing would hear a supposed foul tip.

We clip the following from the Virginia Herald: In the year 1850, while Dr. E. M. Campbell, then a young man was a resident of Jonesville, his horse ran away with him in the woods near Towell's Ford, 4 miles south of here, and in his flight he lost a valuable gold watch. The doctor offered a reward of $25 for the watch, and many people searched the woods for years but without success. Last Saturday, thirty-six years after the loss, the watch was found by John Farmer, who is cultivating the ground, and strange to say, it was in a fair state of preservation. Dr. Campbell afterward returned to Abingdon, where he died some 8 year ago.

Mr. Martin Landy, of this place, was engaged in felling timber on what is known as Wolf Hill, about one mile from town, a few days since. He cut down a very large tree which had a hole in it some ten feet from the ground sufficient for the reception of a horse. On peering in, he discovered the remains of an old hat and coat. The buttons on the coat, which were copper, are said to have been fashionable about the fifteenth century. Further examination revealed a square, a steel-trap and a gun barrel, almost destroyed by rust. A horn and several flints were also found—and last, though not least, a small piece of slate, on which was written these words: "300 feet from here is a fortune." The average boy spends a goodly portion of his time in the vicinity of the stump, and it is said that older heads hunt for squirrels in those parts.—[Grayson County (Va.) Gazette.

Mr. Gilmer jumped out and got the children out, but Mrs. Gilmer could not get out and the mules carried her rapidly over a piece of rough road and by the upturning of the vehicle she was dashed out and severely hurt. Her skull was fractured, and she, at last accounts, was alive and hopes are entertained of her recovery. Judge John A. Kelly, the father of Mrs. Gilmer, was telegraphed for, who, with his wife, started on the first train to see Mrs. Gilmer. Mr. Gilmer and his family had been here several days visiting their relatives and attending the commencement at Marion Female College.

News reached us yesterday, of a sad and lamentable accident that recently occurred in the mountainous part of Russell county. Jeff. Mynatt, a prosperous farmer, who lives near Elk Garden, in that county, had a number of bright children whom he loved dearly. Recently three of his sons, aged 12, 14 and 16 years, went out to an old pond on the place to take a bath. While in the water they all discovered a deep, miry hole in the centre of the pond. Each one of them tried to see which could venture the closest to the hole and escape. While thus dangerously enjoying themselves one of the boys fell headlong into the death-trap. The other two boys seeing their brother go down made a desperate effort to recover him but failed. They also lost their bearing and fell beneath the water. In a short space of time all were sleeping in a watery grave. A twenty-four hours' search brought the dead bodies to the surface, and they were laid to rest in one grave.

In the olden times Achilles, the leader of the Greeks, chased Hector, the champion of the Trojans, several times around the city of Ilium and finally killed him. This would look as if Hector lacked backbone, but in truth, such was not the case; he wasn't well. For unfortunately he had lost his bottle of Dr. Hart's Great Relief. If this sad occurrence had not happened, the issue would have been different.

Moral—Never be without Hart's Relief.

Most Excellent.

J. J. Atkins, Chief of Police, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "My family and I are beneficiaries of your most excellent medicine, Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; having found it to be all that you claim for it, desire to testify to its virtue. My friends to whom I have recommended it, praise it every opportunity."

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption is guaranteed to cure Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup and every affection of Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Nothing Like It.

There has never been anything in Marion like the stock of millinery that I have just opened and am now showing. A complete assortment of all the latest styles of hats ribbons &c. These goods were bought with great care in the Eastern cities and I want all my old customers and many new ones to call and see for themselves.

I also have a splendid stock of notions and dry goods, all fresh and the latest novelties. These goods will be sold at popular prices.

Temperance Column.

JUNE 10, 1886.

D. C. MILLER, EDITOR.

There is a rumor to the effect that the Legislature of this State will be called together in extra session at no distant day. It is, furthermore, given out that there will be an effort to repeal the Local Option Act of the last session. I allude to this in order that temperance men and temperance workers may be at the post of duty. We do not give much credit to the rumor, but it will be well to be ready for any contingency. If those who supported the measure at the last session will stand to their former acts, there will be no danger. We hope that the General Assembly will not undertake to change or repeal the law. For the present, it is right. Let each county and city take the responsibility. The matter is then brought home to each voter, so to speak. Each county now can say whether or not it will permit this baneful influence to creep in and steal away the manhood of its voting citizenship, and impoverish the women and the children, who are always the unwilling sufferers in this matter. We, therefore, hope that our legislators will not agitate this question at its extra session, that they will give the law a fair trial. It will be time enough to repeal the law whenever the people have tried local option and can say they don't like it, that they must have liquor, and plenty of it. Another strong reason for letting it alone, is, that, now, it is non-political and non-partizan.

Just so sure as the present law is repealed, there will be trouble. The politician can but see the hand writing upon the wall. The liquor traffic must cease, and the dealer must change his calling.

A Parable from the Gospel of Prohibition.

1. And it came to pass that a certain lawyer stood up and said to a Prohibitionist: 'I don't need Prohibition to enable me to lead a sober life.'

2. Then said the Prohibitionist: 'Thou shouldst vote the Prohibition ticket then to save thy neighbor.'

3. But the lawyer, willing to justify himself, said: 'And who is my neighbor?'

4. And the Prohibitionist said: 'A certain man going down from the town of Moderate Drinking, to the city of Delirium Tremens, fell among saloon keepers, and other thieves, who stripped him of his character, his health, his self-respect, his money, and his raiment and when he could no longer pay them for their strong drink, they kicked him into the street, wounding him half dead.'

5. And by chance (?) there came down a Personal Liberty Democrat that way (to get a drink) and when he saw the poor man lying in the gutter, he passed by on the other side (into another saloon.)

6. And likewise a High-Licence Republican, when he was at the place (to get a drink) came and looked upon him and said: 'What a pity that man cannot regulate himself better than that,' and he too passed by on the other side (into another saloon.)

7. But a certain Prohibitionist as he journeyed to the polls to vote the Prohibition ticket, came where he was, and when he saw him had compassion on him, and went to him and picked him up out of the gutter, and washed him and bound up his wounds, and poured in the oil and balm of encouragement and hope, and set him on his own best—total abstinence, and took him to his home, and helped his heart-broken wife to get him to bed, and remained through the night and took care of him.

8. And on the morrow as he was about to depart he took out two dollars and gave to wife and said: 'Take good care of thy husband, and whatsoever thou needest more to make him and thyself and thy children comfortably, I will see that thou hast.'

And he departed to prosecute the saloon-keepers and the other thieves, and to vote for Prohibition.

9. Then said the Prohibitionist: 'Which one of these three thickest thou was neighbor to him who fell among the saloon-keepers and other thieves?'

10. And the lawyer said: 'He that had mercy on him and voted and acted as he prayed.'

11. Then said the Prohibitionist: 'Go thou and do likewise, and vote the Prohibition ticket, and defend liquor-seilers no more.'—Confiscat.

THE HOME AND FARM.

CROPS—THEIR CONDITION IN MAY.

We have before us Agricultural Commissioner Randolph Harrison's report for May. From it we gather that the crops all over Virginia, are, on a whole, in good condition. Of wheat—91.81 per cent.

Some Hessian fly, and one report of cinch bug. Also there are some reports of damage by floods.

WINTER OATS. Condition. 70 per cent. This crop suffered much from winter killing.

SPRING OATS. Condition. 88.86 per cent.

RYE. Condition. 90.70 per cent.

CLOVER. Condition. 93 per cent.

TIMOTHY, ORCHARD GRASS, &c. Condition. 94 per cent.

CORN. There will be a full crop planted—between one and two per cent. over a full average.

The area already planted is 73.59 per cent.

PEACH CROP. Prospect only moderately good. Average condition, 70.00.

Perfect Wifehood.

At the risk in the morning Sam Jones said: "There is no more sacred and holy relationship than that of husband and wife. I believe that a true, pure, honest and truthful wife is the greatest blessing bestowed upon man, next to his precious mother. Love is the basis of all. God approved marriage. Love is not simply a little effervescence of sweetheartism, but it is deep as nature and high as the shoulders of God. I don't know how come I to marry my wife. It is said that God gives a man a good wife, and I reckon the devil gives the other kind. To do right is one thing, but to be eternally right is another thing. But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy and peace, long suffering, gentleness, against which there is no law. The ultimatum of the vegetable world about us is mature fruitage. Every person who has ever tasted the pardoning love of God has seen at that moment you loved everybody. You then blossomed into love. But it was only a bud. Then we pour all our energies into this bud. But there are difficulties between the bud and the garner in the skies. There are biting frosts of anger, the gnawing worms of peevishness. God gave woman a little fist and never adjusted her life and character for knives and pistols. Woman doesn't hit you with her fist, but she can hate you like anything. What you lost in dancing you made up in turning around. When you get angry with each other you get under the tree and shake all the little green fruit to the ground. Love conquers anything—love conquers God."

A Rich Minister Drowned.

Wolfboro, N. H., May 29.—Yesterday the Rev. T. C. Jerome, pastor of the Congregational Church of this village, with his two sons and a daughter and a young man named Davis, went out on the lake for a fishing excursion and failed to return at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, as expected. A steamer, which arrived at 4 o'clock, reported having seen an overturned boat near Jarvistown Island. Search was made and late in the evening the bodies of the whole party were recovered.

Mr. Jerome was worth about $250,000. He came from New York two years ago and was a brother of Irene Jerome, the artist and authoress.

Colonel Donan to the Ladies.

Colonel Peter Donan, of Dakota, has written a characteristic Easter letter to the New York Sun, in which he advises the ladies to make themselves in this spring season as beautiful as they know how. In closing he says, among other things: "Dear girl-and women readers, dress as you please. It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that, for you will be pretty apt to do it anyhow. Choose your own colors, shapes, and materials. Spare no pains to render yourselves as fascinating as possible. The Almighty made you to be beautiful, and you fail to do your duty if you are not so. If a little paint or lily-white enhances your charms use it, but beware of the poisoned kinds. If a little or big bonnet, a long or short dress, a tight or loose skirt, a high or low heel, a plain or fancy hue, becomes you, wear it. Consult only your own sweet tastes and the dimensions of your fathers' or husbands' pocket books; and, my word for it, whatever you do, whatever you wear, will sooner or later be recognized as right and proper, becoming and bewitching, by the surliest cynic in all your legions of masculine subjects. Let these cynics, if they will sneer, begin by up-braiding the Hand that spreads their exquisite tints upon the lily and the rose; that decks the autumn forests with their gorgeous draperies of a thousand dyes; that carpets the valleys with their soft, rich velvet eye-refreshing green, and mingles the deep, dark blue of the empyrean vault in old ocean's majestic waves; that spangles the azure mantle of the universe with golden stars, and implants their wondrous coruscating fires in the opals and the diamond's heart; that teaches the sun's artistic fingers to paint the evening skies with all the liquid hues of a million shattered prisms; that bestows his changeful corat on the chameleon, and casts the oesate flush of early morning on the mountain tops and glassy lakes; the tancircles the frowning brow of heaven with the glittering rainbow coronet, and hangs the wondrously-blazing aurora borealis lumps upon the northern pole. God's hand does it. He is the source, the foundation of all beauty in heaven, earth, sea, and air. To Him give praise for every lovely, pleasing, enchanting thing in all creation's bounds. He made it go give happiness. Away with the canting niggards who would throw a straw in the path of the loveliest sublunary being, the masterpiece of Deity's hand work, in any effort to add to her attractiveness."

The Eleventh Hour.

'It is true,' said a merchant to a clergyman, 'I am not satisfied with my present condition. I am not of a settled mind in religion, as you express it. Still I am not utterly hopeless. I may yet enter the vineyard at the eleventh hour.'

'Ah! your allusion is to the Saviour's parable of the laborers who wrought one hour at the end of the day. But you have overlooked the fact that these men accepted the first offer.'

'Is that so?'

'Certainly. They said to the lord of the vineyard: "No man hath hired us." They welcomed his first offer immediately.'

'True; I had not thought of that before. But the thief on the cross, even while dying, was saved.'

'Yes; but it is likely that he even had never rejected an offer of salvation as preached by Christ and His Apostles? He had been a robber by profession. In the resorts and haunts to which he had been accustomed the gospel may never have been preached. Is there not some reason to believe that he, too, accepted the first offer?'

'Why, you seem desirous to quench my last spark of hope.'

'Why should I not? Such hope is an illusion. You have really no promise of acceptance at some future time. Now is the accepted time. Begin at once!'

'How shall I begin?'

'Just as the poor leper did when he met Jesus by the way, and committed his body to the Great Physician in order to be healed. So commit your soul to Him as a present Saviour.—Then serve Him from love; the next, even the most common duty of life that you have to perform, do it as service unto Him. Will you accept the first offer? Your eyes are open to see your peril. Beware of delay—Beware?'

'You are right. May God help me! I fear I have been living in a kind of delusion on this subject.'
